

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 1 19/05/2026 9:36:13

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents. The protests, often referred to as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," began in Minneapolis and quickly spread to cities such as Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin. Organizers, including groups like the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions, demanded accountability for the killings, an end to ICE operations, and the abolition of the agency itself. The protests were also a reaction to the Trump administration's expanded immigration enforcement policies, including Operation Metro Surge, which increased ICE presence and raids nationwide.

[\[Wikipedia\]](#) [\[Wikipedia\]](#) [\[ABC News\]](#)

Demonstrations included mass marches, school walkouts, and strikes, with tens of thousands participating. In Minneapolis, around 50,000 people joined a single demonstration, and over 300 protests were organized nationwide by January 31. The movement gained momentum as more incidents involving ICE agents came to light, further fueling public outrage and calls for policy changes. [\[Wikipedia\]](#) [\[Wikipedia\]](#) [\[ABC News\]](#)

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 2 19/05/2026 9:37:25

In January 2026, anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States in response to heightened federal immigration enforcement under the second Trump administration. The immediate catalyst was the fatal shooting of Renée Good by an ICE agent in Minneapolis on January 7, followed by the killing of Alex Pretti by Customs and Border Protection agents on January 24. These incidents, along with aggressive ICE raids and mass arrests under Operation Metro Surge, sparked widespread outrage and mobilized thousands of protesters nationwide.

Major protests occurred in Minneapolis, where tens of thousands demonstrated in subzero temperatures, leading to a general strike on January 23 and a "National Shutdown" on January 30. Other significant actions took place in New York City, Boston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Austin, with participants including activists, students, religious leaders, and local officials. Protesters occupied public spaces, blocked streets, and staged walkouts, demanding accountability, the end of ICE operations, and policy changes. Over 36 arrests were made in Minneapolis and Portland, and dozens more in other cities.

The protests were organized by a coalition of groups, including labor unions, student organizations, and immigrant rights advocates, reflecting broad opposition to federal immigration tactics and solidarity with affected communities.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 3 19/05/2026 9:38:36

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents. The protests, often referred to as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," began in Minneapolis and quickly spread to cities such as Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin. Organizers, including groups like the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions, demanded accountability for the killings, an end to mass deportation policies, and the abolition of ICE. The demonstrations included strikes, rallies, and school walkouts, with tens of thousands participating nationwide. The protests were fueled by public outrage over the Trump administration's expanded immigration enforcement, particularly Operation Metro Surge, which increased ICE presence and raids in several states.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 4 19/05/2026 9:39:30

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents. The protests, often referred to as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," began in Minneapolis and quickly spread to cities such as Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin. Organizers, including groups like the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions, demanded accountability for the killings, an end to mass deportation policies, and the abolition of ICE. The protests were marked by large crowds, with estimates of up to 50,000 participants in Minneapolis alone, and included strikes, marches, and school walkouts. The demonstrations were a direct reaction to the Trump administration's expanded immigration enforcement, particularly Operation Metro Surge, which increased ICE presence and raids nationwide. The movement also sought to highlight the lack of investigation into the actions of ICE agents and to advocate for protections for immigrant and international students.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 5 19/05/2026 9:40:50

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents. The protests, often referred to as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," began in Minneapolis and quickly spread to cities such as Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin. Organizers, including groups like the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions, demanded accountability for the killings, an end to ICE operations, and the abolition of the agency itself. The demonstrations were also a reaction to the Trump administration's expanded immigration enforcement policies, including Operation Metro Surge, which increased ICE presence and raids nationwide.

The protests involved mass marches, strikes, and school walkouts, with tens of thousands participating. In Minneapolis, around 50,000 people joined a single demonstration, and over 1,000 protests were planned or held across the country. The movement gained further momentum after additional incidents, such as the shooting of two people in Portland and the arrest of journalists covering the protests. The protests were largely peaceful, though there were reports of arrests and clashes with law enforcement in some locations.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 6 19/05/2026 9:41:34

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents in Minneapolis. The protests, including a national strike on January 30 known as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," were organized by coalitions such as the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions and student groups. Demonstrations occurred in major cities like Minneapolis, Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin, with thousands participating in marches, vigils, and school walkouts. Protesters demanded accountability for the killings, an end to ICE operations, and the abolition of the agency itself, citing expanded federal immigration enforcement under the Trump administration's Operation Metro Surge and mass deportation policies. The protests also targeted businesses believed to be complicit with ICE, such as Target, and led to arrests in several cities. The movement reflected broader opposition to federal immigration tactics and calls for policy reform.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 7 19/05/2026 9:42:39

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents. The protests, often referred to as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," began in Minneapolis and quickly spread to cities such as Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin. Organizers, including groups like the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions, demanded accountability for the killings, an end to mass deportation policies, and the abolition of ICE. The protests were marked by large crowds, with estimates of up to 50,000 participants in Minneapolis alone, and included strikes, marches, and school walkouts. The demonstrations were a direct reaction to the Trump administration's expanded immigration enforcement, particularly Operation Metro Surge, which increased ICE presence and raids nationwide. The movement also called for protections for immigrant and international students, and for ICE to be removed from local communities. The protests continued into February, with hundreds of arrests reported in various cities.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 8 19/05/2026 9:43:35

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents. The protests, often referred to as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," began in Minneapolis and quickly spread to cities such as Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin. Organizers, including groups like the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions, demanded accountability for the killings, an end to ICE operations, and the abolition of the agency itself. The protests were also a reaction to the Trump administration's expanded immigration enforcement, including Operation Metro Surge, which increased ICE presence and raids nationwide.

Demonstrations included mass rallies, school walkouts, and strikes, with tens of thousands participating. In Minneapolis, around 50,000 people joined a single demonstration, and protests were marked by clashes with law enforcement, arrests, and calls for a nationwide boycott of work, school, and shopping. The movement gained momentum as more incidents involving ICE agents came to light, further fueling public outrage and demands for policy changes.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 9 19/05/2026 9:44:21

In January 2026, widespread anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States, primarily in response to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents. The protests, often referred to as the "National Shutdown" or "ICE Out," began in Minneapolis and quickly spread to cities such as Los Angeles, New York, Portland, and Austin. Organizers, including groups like the 50501 movement, Women's March, and various labor unions, demanded accountability for the killings, an end to ICE operations, and the abolition of the agency itself. The protests were also a reaction to the Trump administration's expanded immigration enforcement policies, including Operation Metro Surge, which increased ICE presence and raids in several states.

Demonstrations took various forms, including strikes, rallies, and school walkouts, with tens of thousands participating nationwide. In Minneapolis, where the initial killings occurred, protests were particularly intense, leading to arrests and clashes with law enforcement. The movement gained momentum as more cities joined, with protesters calling for a halt to mass deportations and the withdrawal of ICE agents from their communities. The protests highlighted tensions over immigration enforcement and renewed national debates about the role and practices of ICE.

1-ICE-EN: Repetition 10 19/05/2026 9:45:00

In January 2026, anti-ICE protests erupted across the United States in response to heightened federal immigration enforcement under the second Trump administration. The immediate catalyst was the fatal shooting of Renée Good by an ICE agent in Minneapolis on January 7, followed by the killing of Alex Pretti by Customs and Border Protection agents on January 24. These incidents, along with aggressive ICE raids and mass arrests under Operation Metro Surge, sparked widespread outrage and mobilized activists, community leaders, and ordinary citizens.

Major protests occurred in Minneapolis, where tens of thousands demonstrated in subzero temperatures, including a general strike on January 23 and a "National Shutdown" on January 30. Other significant actions took place in New York City, Boston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Austin, with rallies, marches, and school walkouts. In New York, protesters occupied a hotel lobby believed to house federal agents, while in Boston, hundreds gathered at South Bay. The protests involved diverse participants, including students, clergy, and local politicians, who demanded accountability, policy changes, and the removal of ICE from their communities. The movement also saw solidarity actions, such as business closures and economic blackouts, to challenge immigration enforcement practices and support immigrant communities.

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 1 20/05/2026 10:03:30

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis". [ABC News] [Time] [CBS News]
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration's Deportation Push". [UPI] [Wikipedia]
3. "New York City Mayor Mamdani Vows to Uphold Sanctuary Laws as Thousands Protest ICE Operation Salvo". [Wikipedia]

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 2 20/05/2026 10:06:08

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis".
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration's Deportation Push".
3. "Minneapolis General Strike and Mass Demonstrations Demand Accountability After ICE Killings, Sparking National Debate on Immigration Enforcement".

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 3 20/05/2026 10:07:03

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that began in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis".
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across the U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump's Deportation Push".
3. "Hundreds of Groups Call for National Action Against Federal Immigration Tactics as Anti-ICE Movement Gains Momentum".

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 4 20/05/2026 10:07:43

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis"
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across the U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration's Deportation Efforts"
3. "Hundreds of Groups Call for National Action Against Federal Immigration Tactics as Anti-ICE Protests Spread"

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 5 20/05/2026 10:08:15

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis"

2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration's Deportation Push"
3. "Hundreds of Groups Call for National Action Against Federal Immigration Tactics as Anti-ICE Movement Gains Momentum"

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 6 20/05/2026 10:08:46

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis".
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across the U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump's Deportation Push".
3. "Minneapolis General Strike and 'ICE Out of Everywhere' Rallies Draw Tens of Thousands, Sparking National Debate on Immigration Enforcement".

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 7 20/05/2026 10:09:20

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis"
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration's Deportation Push"
3. "Massive Crowds March in 'ICE Out of Everywhere' Demonstrations as Calls to Abolish ICE Intensify"

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 8 20/05/2026 10:10:33

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis"
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across the U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration's Deportation Efforts"
3. "Minneapolis General Strike and 'ICE Out of Everywhere' Protests Draw Tens of Thousands, Sparking National Debate on Immigration Enforcement"

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 9 20/05/2026 10:10:57

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis".
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across the U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration Deportation Efforts".
3. "Minneapolis and New York City See Massive Turnouts as Protesters Demand Abolition of ICE and Accountability for Federal Agents".

2-ICE-EN: Repetition 10 20/05/2026 10:11:27

Here are three news headlines about the anti-ICE protests in the United States that started in January 2026:

1. "Nationwide 'National Shutdown' Protests Erupt Against ICE Following Fatal Shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti in Minneapolis"
2. "Over 300 Anti-ICE Protests Held Across the U.S. in Response to Activist Deaths and Trump Administration's Deportation Efforts"
3. "Hundreds of Groups Call for National Action Against Federal Immigration Tactics as Anti-ICE Protests Spread"

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 1 21/05/2026 10:19:07

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists employed coordinated, disruptive tactics to hinder federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States. In Minneapolis, a focal point of the unrest, large crowds surrounded ICE facilities and federal buildings, blocking access and forcing the suspension of some enforcement actions. Activists, responding to calls from groups like NorCal Resist, swarmed locations where ICE agents were conducting arrests or detentions, such as the Wyckoff Heights Medical Center in Brooklyn, where around 200 protesters assembled after learning of an ICE detention, effectively preventing the transfer of detainees and disrupting operations for hours. [Wikipedia]

In Minnesota, the January 23 general strike saw thousands refuse work, school, and commerce, creating an economic pause that disrupted daily life and drew attention to ICE's expanded operations under Operation Metro Surge. Protesters also occupied federal buildings and highways, leading to clashes with law enforcement and the deployment of tear gas. These actions, combined with widespread picketing and boycotts of businesses perceived to cooperate with ICE, aimed to paralyze enforcement infrastructure and pressure authorities to withdraw agents from the state. [Wikipedia] [Wikipedia] The intensity of these disruptions prompted legal interventions, including a federal judge blocking DHS agents from arresting or using force against peaceful protesters in Minnesota. [CBS News]

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 2 21/05/2026 10:21:04

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists employed coordinated, disruptive tactics to hinder federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States. In Minneapolis, a focal point of the unrest, large crowds surrounded ICE facilities, federal buildings, and even hospitals where detainees were being treated, effectively blocking access and forcing delays in operations. For example, on May 2, 2026, around 200 protesters assembled outside Wyckoff Heights Medical Center in Brooklyn after learning that ICE agents had brought a detainee there for medical care, creating a chaotic scene that disrupted law enforcement activities and drew widespread media attention.

Activists also organized mass walkouts, strikes, and economic disruptions, such as the January 23, 2026, Minnesota general strike, which aimed to paralyze daily life and pressure authorities to withdraw ICE and CBP agents. Protesters physically confronted agents, documented enforcement actions, and used social media to mobilize rapid responses to ICE activity, often arriving en masse to interfere with arrests and transports. These actions were part of a broader strategy to overwhelm and intimidate federal officers, leading to clashes and, in some cases, legal interventions to protect protesters' rights. The protests were marked by their scale, persistence, and the use of direct action to obstruct immigration enforcement.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 3 21/05/2026 10:21:26

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists employed coordinated, disruptive tactics to hinder federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States. In Minneapolis, a focal point of the unrest, protesters responded to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by ICE and CBP agents by organizing large-scale demonstrations, including the January 23 general strike. Activists encouraged widespread work stoppages, school closures, and business shutdowns to create economic pressure and draw attention to what they described as harmful ICE practices. Hundreds of small businesses and community organizations participated, aiming to disrupt the daily operations of immigration enforcement and federal overreach.

Activists also physically intervened in ICE operations. For example, when ICE agents arrested a Nigerian immigrant in Brooklyn on May 2, 2026, around 200 protesters quickly assembled outside the hospital where the detainee was taken, attempting to block further enforcement actions. In San Francisco, groups like NorCal Resist mobilized observers to document and interfere with immigration sweeps, while in Minneapolis, protesters occupied federal buildings and highways, leading to significant traffic disruptions and direct confrontations with agents. These actions were part of a broader strategy to obstruct ICE's ability to conduct arrests and deportations, often resulting in violent clashes and legal challenges over the use of force by federal agents.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 4 21/05/2026 10:21:49

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists employed coordinated, disruptive tactics to hinder federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States. In Minneapolis, a focal point of the unrest, thousands of protesters responded to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by ICE and CBP agents by staging mass demonstrations, including a general strike on January 23. Activists encouraged widespread work stoppages, school closures, and business shutdowns to create economic pressure and draw attention to what they described as harmful ICE practices. Protesters also physically confronted federal agents, leading to clashes and arrests, and temporarily occupied federal buildings and highways, causing significant disruptions to daily operations and traffic.

In San Francisco, around 200 activists gathered outside ICE facilities, documenting enforcement actions and recruiting participants for future protests, while in New York, a mob of approximately 200 protesters assembled outside a hospital where an ICE detainee was receiving treatment, attempting to block federal agents from transporting the individual. These actions were often organized through networks like NorCal Resist, which mobilized observers to document and interfere with immigration sweeps, further complicating enforcement efforts. The scale and intensity of these protests forced federal authorities to adjust operations and faced legal challenges, including a federal judge blocking DHS agents from arresting or using force on peaceful protesters in Minnesota.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 5 21/05/2026 10:22:15

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists employed coordinated, disruptive tactics to hinder federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States. In Minneapolis, a focal point of the unrest, large crowds surrounded ICE facilities and federal buildings, physically blocking agents from conducting arrests and deportations. Activists responded to "calls to action" from groups like NorCal Resist, rapidly mobilizing to document and interfere with immigration sweeps. For example, when ICE agents detained a Nigerian immigrant at a Brooklyn hospital, around 200 protesters quickly assembled outside, creating a human barrier and forcing agents to delay transport. Similar scenes unfolded in San Francisco, where 200 demonstrators gathered outside an ICE facility, delivering speeches and recruiting new members to sustain pressure on authorities.

The protests escalated into a "National Shutdown" on January 30, with thousands participating in strikes and walkouts, aiming to paralyze local economies and draw attention to ICE's operations. In Minneapolis, activists occupied federal buildings and highways, leading to significant traffic disruptions and direct confrontations with law enforcement. These actions were often met with force, as federal agents used tear gas and nonlethal munitions to disperse crowds, while a federal judge later restricted such tactics against peaceful protesters. The sustained pressure and physical interference by activist mobs effectively disrupted routine ICE operations, forcing delays and diversions in enforcement activities.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 6 21/05/2026 10:22:35

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists employed coordinated, disruptive tactics to hinder federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States. In Minneapolis, an epicenter of the unrest, protesters responded to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by ICE and CBP agents by organizing mass demonstrations, including the "National Shutdown" on January 30. Activists surrounded federal buildings, such as the Whipple Federal Building, and ICE facilities, effectively blocking access and forcing temporary halts to operations. In San Francisco, around 200 protesters gathered outside an ICE facility, delivering speeches and recruiting participants for future actions, while in Minnesota, a general strike on January 23 saw widespread work stoppages, school closures, and business disruptions to protest Operation Metro Surge and demand the withdrawal of federal agents.

Activists also used rapid mobilization strategies. For example, when ICE agents detained a Nigerian immigrant at a Brooklyn hospital, locals quickly notified community activists, leading to a crowd of 200 assembling outside the medical center, disrupting the agents' ability to operate and forcing them to navigate through hostile crowds. These actions, combined with legal challenges and public pressure, significantly impeded ICE's ability to conduct arrests and deportations, drawing national attention to the confrontation between federal enforcement and activist resistance.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 7 21/05/2026 10:22:56

In January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists significantly disrupted federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States, particularly in Minneapolis, as part of the anti-ICE protests. Activists, responding to the Trump administration's expanded ICE operations like Operation Metro Surge, employed mass mobilization and direct action. In Minneapolis, thousands gathered to protest ICE arrests, leading to economic and civil disruptions, with schools shifting to remote learning and businesses closing in solidarity. Protesters also physically intervened in ICE operations: for example, on May 2, 2026, around 200 activists assembled outside Wyckoff Heights Medical Center in Brooklyn after learning ICE agents had detained an undocumented immigrant there, effectively surrounding the facility and hindering federal agents' movements.

Activist groups such as NorCal Resist organized observers to document and interfere with immigration sweeps, while in San Francisco, some 200 protesters gathered outside ICE facilities, delivering speeches and recruiting for future actions. These tactics aimed to overwhelm and delay enforcement, drawing public attention and pressuring authorities to withdraw. The protests often turned confrontational, with federal agents reporting harassment and threats from observers, and in some cases, protesters temporarily occupying federal buildings or blocking access to immigration courts. The scale and intensity of these actions marked a coordinated effort to disrupt ICE's ability to operate, reflecting a broader national movement against mass deportation policies.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 8 21/05/2026 10:23:23

In January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists significantly disrupted federal immigration enforcement operations through coordinated, large-scale protests across the United States. The most intense actions occurred in Minneapolis, where thousands gathered to oppose Operation Metro Surge—a federal initiative that deployed thousands of ICE and Border Patrol agents, resulting in over 3,000 arrests. Activists, responding to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal agents, organized a "National Shutdown" on January 30, 2026. Protesters surrounded ICE facilities, federal buildings, and even hospitals where detainees were taken, such as the Wyckoff Heights Medical Center in Brooklyn, where around 200 activists assembled to block ICE agents from transporting a detainee. In Minneapolis, demonstrators temporarily occupied federal buildings and major highways, causing significant traffic disruptions and economic pauses as businesses closed in solidarity. Activist groups like NorCal Resist and VC Defensa mobilized observers to document and interfere with immigration sweeps, while others picketed businesses perceived to cooperate with ICE, such as Target stores in Washington, D.C. The protests often turned confrontational, with federal agents using tear gas and nonlethal munitions, and a federal judge eventually blocking DHS agents from arresting or using force on peaceful protesters in Minnesota.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 9 21/05/2026 10:23:46

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists employed coordinated, disruptive tactics to hinder federal immigration enforcement operations across the United States. In Minneapolis, a focal point of the unrest, protesters responded to the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by ICE and CBP agents by organizing mass demonstrations, including the January 23 "National Shutdown" and general strike. These actions aimed to paralyze local economies and draw attention to what activists described as abusive enforcement practices. Hundreds of businesses and institutions closed in solidarity, while protesters physically blocked access to federal buildings, ICE facilities, and even hospitals where detainees were taken, such as the Wyckoff Heights Medical Center in Brooklyn, where around 200 activists assembled to prevent the transfer of a detainee.

Activists also used "calls to action" from groups like NorCal Resist to mobilize observers who documented and interfered with immigration sweeps, sometimes leading to direct confrontations with federal agents. In San Francisco, large crowds gathered outside ICE offices, delivering speeches and recruiting new members. The protests often escalated into physical obstructions, with demonstrators temporarily occupying highways and federal property, causing significant disruptions to enforcement activities and daily operations.

3-ICE-EN: Repetition 10 21/05/2026 10:24:07

In January 2026, mobs of open-borders activists significantly disrupted federal immigration enforcement operations through coordinated, large-scale protests across the United States. The most intense actions occurred in Minneapolis, where thousands gathered to oppose Operation Metro Surge—a federal crackdown involving thousands of ICE and Border Patrol agents. Activists employed tactics such as mass walkouts, economic pauses (encouraging businesses and schools to close), and direct confrontations at ICE facilities and federal buildings. For example, on January 23, the Minnesota general strike drew widespread participation, aiming to halt daily operations and draw attention to alleged abuses by ICE, including the fatal shootings of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by federal agents earlier that month.

Protesters also physically intervened in ICE operations. In Brooklyn, around 200 activists assembled outside a hospital where ICE agents had taken a detainee, effectively blocking access and forcing agents to abandon their transport plans. In San Francisco, some 200 demonstrators surrounded an ICE facility, delivering speeches and recruiting new members, while in Minneapolis, activists occupied portions of federal buildings and highways, causing significant disruptions to enforcement activities. These actions were often organized by coalitions like NorCal Resist and VC Defensa, which mobilized observers to document and obstruct immigration sweeps, sometimes leading to clashes with law enforcement. The protests not only disrupted ICE's ability to conduct arrests and deportations but also sparked legal and political backlash, including lawsuits and federal investigations into the conduct of both agents and activists.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 1 22/05/2026 10:15:47

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, immigrant communities across the United States faced intense terror and violence at the hands of ICE agents. In Minneapolis, ICE and Border Patrol agents conducted what was described as the largest immigration operation ever, deploying 3,000 agents in just over a week. These agents patrolled predominantly Latino neighborhoods, randomly stopping people with accents or brown skin, demanding proof of citizenship, and making arrests without warrants. Families were forcibly separated, with mothers and children kidnapped in broad daylight, sparking widespread fear and forcing businesses and schools to close as people sheltered at home. [EL PAÍS English]

Protesters and organizers reported that ICE agents used aggressive and violent tactics, including pepper spray and tear gas, to suppress dissent and intimidate communities. The killing of Renée Good by an ICE agent on January 7, 2026, further galvanized nationwide protests, with thousands marching under the banner “ICE Out!” to demand an end to what they called a “reign of terror” and the kidnapping of neighbors by federal agents. [Common Dreams] [EL PAÍS English] [Wikipedia] The operations were widely condemned as racist, with agents accused of sowing chaos and fear in immigrant and communities of color, often under the false pretense of targeting criminals. [LDF] [EL PAÍS English]

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 2 22/05/2026 10:18:13

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, immigrant communities across the United States faced intense terror as ICE agents, emboldened by the Trump administration’s expanded enforcement policies, escalated their aggressive tactics. In cities like Minneapolis, ICE and Border Patrol agents conducted mass arrests, with around 3,000 people detained in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area alone as part of “Operation Metro Surge.” Agents were reported to have violently reacted to protests, including the fatal shooting of Renée Good, a 37-year-old woman, by an ICE agent on January 7, 2026. This incident, along with the shooting of two others in Portland, Oregon, and the killing of Alex Pretti, fueled nationwide outrage and protests.

Protest organizers and community members described ICE agents as enforcers of a racist agenda, entering predominantly Latino neighborhoods to “kidnap” neighbors and sow fear. Agents patrolled streets, lurked in courthouses, and demanded proof of citizenship from anyone with an accent or brown skin, creating an atmosphere of constant terror. Families were forced to shelter in their homes, businesses closed, and in-person classes were canceled as communities lived in fear of being targeted. The use of pepper spray and tear gas against protesters further demonstrated the violent and intimidating tactics employed by ICE. The protests, including a National Shutdown on January 30, 2026, demanded an end to ICE’s “reign of terror” and justice for victims of state-sanctioned violence.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 3 22/05/2026 10:18:34

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, immigrant communities across the United States faced intense terror and violence at the hands of ICE agents. In Minneapolis, ICE and Border Patrol agents conducted what was described as the largest immigration operation ever, deploying 3,000 agents in just over a week. These agents patrolled predominantly Latino neighborhoods, randomly stopping people with accents or brown skin, demanding proof of citizenship, and making arrests without warrants. Families were forcibly separated, with mothers and children kidnapped in broad daylight, sparking widespread fear and outrage. Protesters reported that ICE agents used pepper spray and tear gas against demonstrators, and in some cases, fatally shot civilians, such as Renée Good in Minneapolis and Alex Pretti in Portland, further escalating tensions.

The operations were characterized by racial profiling and aggressive tactics, with agents harassing and threatening observers, and even shooting at vehicles. Communities responded with mass protests, including a National Shutdown on January 30, 2026, demanding an end to ICE's "reign of terror" and the release of detained neighbors. Organizers condemned ICE's actions as state-sanctioned kidnapping and racism, emphasizing that the agency's presence sowed chaos and fear, forcing businesses to close and families to hide in their homes.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 4 22/05/2026 10:18:56

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, ICE agents were widely accused of terrorizing immigrant communities through aggressive raids, arbitrary detentions, and violent confrontations. In cities like Minneapolis, New York, and Portland, masked ICE agents conducted mass arrests, often without warrants, targeting individuals based on racial profiling—particularly those with accents or brown skin. Reports describe agents patrolling Latino neighborhoods, lurking in courthouses, and even pulling people from their cars, such as the case of Chidozie Wilson Okeke in Brooklyn, who was forcibly detained and injured during his arrest. The killing of Renée Good and Alex Pretti by ICE agents further escalated tensions, sparking nationwide outrage and protests.

Protesters and activists documented instances of ICE agents using pepper spray and tear gas against civilians, and communities reported living in constant fear as agents "disappeared" family members, denied due process, and undermined constitutional rights. The scale of operations, such as Operation Metro Surge, resulted in roughly 3,000 arrests and daily confrontations, with agents accused of acting as "vigilantes" engaging in what critics called kidnappings. These actions have left immigrant communities traumatized, with many describing the period as a "year of terror" under Trump's expanded immigration enforcement.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 5 22/05/2026 10:19:15

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, ICE agents were widely reported to have terrorized immigrant communities through aggressive, militarized raids and violent tactics. In Minneapolis, for example, federal agents conducted large-scale operations like "Operation Metro Surge," resulting in roughly 3,000 arrests and at least two fatal shootings of civilians by ICE and Border Patrol agents. Witnesses described scenes of agents smashing car windows, dragging people from vehicles, and pointing guns at unarmed civilians. Families were separated as agents intercepted parents and children in residential neighborhoods, sparking fear and outrage. Protesters and community members reported that ICE agents harassed and threatened observers, even those simply documenting the operations, and used pepper spray and tear gas against demonstrators.

The atmosphere was one of widespread terror, with immigrants and their allies living in constant fear of home invasions, arbitrary detentions, and violent abductions. Community members organized mutual aid networks to warn each other of ICE presence, as agents were seen kidnapping individuals in broad daylight, including a Nigerian immigrant in Brooklyn who was forcibly detained in his car and injured during the arrest. These actions were widely condemned as state-sanctioned violence, with critics likening ICE's tactics to kidnapping and vigilantism.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 6 22/05/2026 10:19:32

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, ICE agents were widely reported to have terrorized immigrant communities through aggressive, militarized tactics. In cities like Minneapolis, agents—often masked and heavily armed—conducted mass arrests, detaining thousands and targeting individuals in sensitive locations such as schools, medical facilities, and places of worship. Witnesses described scenes of agents storming neighborhoods, pulling people from their homes and cars without warrants, and abandoning vehicles of detainees in public streets, leaving communities in panic. The use of racial profiling was rampant, with agents detaining people based on skin color or accent, and often holding them for hours without cause. The violence escalated to fatal shootings, including the killing of Renée Good and Alex Pretti, which further fueled public outrage and protests.

Families were effectively kidnapped during these operations, with agents separating parents from children and disappearing individuals into unmarked vehicles. The fear was so pervasive that residents avoided leaving their homes, and local businesses saw drastic drops in revenue as customers feared being targeted. The actions of ICE were widely condemned as state-sanctioned terror, with communities describing the atmosphere as one of constant surveillance and intimidation.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 7 22/05/2026 10:19:52

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, immigrant communities across the United States faced intense terror and violence at the hands of ICE agents. In Minneapolis, for example, ICE and Border Patrol agents conducted what was described as the largest immigration operation ever, deploying some 3,000 agents in just over a week. These agents patrolled predominantly Latino neighborhoods, randomly stopping people with accents or brown skin, demanding proof of citizenship, and using pepper spray and tear gas against protesters. The atmosphere was one of widespread fear, with businesses closing, schools canceling in-person classes, and families hiding in their homes to avoid being targeted.

Protest organizers and community members reported that ICE agents and Border Patrol were "going into our communities to kidnap our neighbors and sow fear," using violent tactics to surveil, interrogate, and detain people. The killing of Renée Good by an ICE agent on January 7, 2026, further fueled outrage, as agents were seen shooting and arresting people during protests, with at least 36 arrests made in Minneapolis and Portland alone. The federal government's actions were widely condemned as a racist campaign, with agents acting as "vigilantes engaging in kidnapping," and communities organizing patrols to warn residents of ICE's presence to prevent abductions.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 8 22/05/2026 10:20:11

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, immigrant communities across the United States faced intense terror as ICE agents escalated their operations. In cities like Minneapolis, New York, and Portland, masked ICE agents conducted aggressive raids, often in predominantly Latino neighborhoods, courthouses, and even outside schools. Reports describe agents patrolling streets, stopping individuals based on racial profiling, and demanding proof of citizenship at random. Families were forcibly separated as agents arrested undocumented immigrants in their homes, cars, and workplaces—sometimes without warrants or consent, effectively kidnapping parents in front of their children. The use of pepper spray and tear gas against protesters and bystanders became commonplace, further instilling fear.

The protests were sparked by the fatal shootings of civilians, including Renée Good and Alex Pretti, by ICE agents during raids. These incidents, along with the mass arrests and disappearances of immigrants, galvanized nationwide resistance. Communities reported that ICE agents denied due process, searched vehicles and homes illegally, and targeted activists documenting their actions. The scale of enforcement was unprecedented, with operations like "Operation Metro Surge" resulting in roughly 3,000 arrests in Minneapolis alone by mid-January, amid daily confrontations and fatal shootings. The result was a climate of fear, with families living in constant terror of being torn apart by federal agents.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 9 22/05/2026 10:20:30

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, immigrant communities across the United States faced intense terror and violence at the hands of ICE agents. In Minneapolis, ICE and Border Patrol agents conducted what was described as the largest immigration operation ever, deploying 3,000 federal agents in just over a week. These agents patrolled predominantly Latino neighborhoods, randomly stopping people with accents or brown skin, demanding proof of citizenship, and using pepper spray and tear gas against protesters. The city was thrown into chaos: businesses closed, schools canceled in-person classes, and families hid in their homes, fearing kidnapping or deportation. Organizers and witnesses reported that ICE agents routinely harassed, threatened, and violently reacted to protesters, including the fatal shooting of Renée Good in Minneapolis on January 7, 2026, which sparked nationwide outrage and protests. The operations were widely condemned as racist and designed to sow fear, with agents described as "kidnapping" neighbors and terrorizing communities as part of a broader, discriminatory agenda.

4-ICE-EN: Repetition 10 22/05/2026 10:20:52

During the anti-ICE protests that began in January 2026, immigrant communities across the United States faced intense terror and violence at the hands of ICE agents. In cities like Minneapolis, ICE and Border Patrol agents conducted mass arrests, with around 3,000 people detained in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area alone as part of "Operation Metro Surge." Agents were reported to have used violent tactics, including pepper spray and tear gas, against protesters and bystanders, often targeting people based on racial profiling—anyone with an accent or brown skin was forced to prove their citizenship on the spot. Families were kidnapped from streets, courthouses, and even their homes, with agents patrolling predominantly Latino neighborhoods and creating an atmosphere of fear and chaos. The killing of Renée Good by an ICE agent on January 7, 2026, further fueled outrage, as agents were seen circling her vehicle before the fatal shooting. Protest organizers described ICE's actions as a "reign of terror," with agents going into communities daily to "kidnap neighbors and sow fear" as part of a racist agenda. The federal operations left cities in a state of terror, with businesses closed, schools canceled, and families hiding in their homes to avoid arrest or deportation.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 1 23/05/2026 11:17:07

The protests in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the historic collapse of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages. The unrest started in Tehran's Grand Bazaar, a historic center of economic and political activism, and quickly spread to over 200 cities, including Isfahan, Mashhad, Ahvaz, and regions in Lorestan and Kurdistan. The demonstrations involved merchants, students, workers, and ordinary citizens, all expressing deep frustration with economic mismanagement, political repression, and social inequality. [\[Wikipedia\]](#) [\[Pledge4Peace\]](#) [\[Iran HRM\]](#)

Initially focused on economic hardship—such as the rial's depreciation to record lows and rising living costs—the protests rapidly evolved into broader political demands. Demonstrators chanted anti-government slogans like “Death to the dictator” and “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran,” calling for political reform and even the removal of the theocratic establishment. The government responded with force, leading to thousands of arrests and a deadly crackdown, while also attempting to frame the protests as solely economically motivated. [\[ISW\]](#) [\[NSSA BYU\]](#) [\[Iran HRM\]](#) The uprisings reflected a profound legitimacy crisis for the Islamic Republic, exposing the limits of repression as a means of governance. [\[NSSA BYU\]](#)

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 2 23/05/2026 11:19:25

The protests in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation (reaching 42% in December 2025), and widespread shortages. The unrest started among bazaar merchants, small business owners, and wage earners in Tehran's Grand Bazaar, quickly spreading to over 200 cities, including Esfahan, Hamadan, Babol, Ilam, and Kermanshah. The protests were fueled by public anger over rising living costs, government mismanagement, and international sanctions, with some demonstrators chanting slogans against the government's foreign policy, such as “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran”.

The participants were diverse, including urban workers, students, and ethnic minority groups, though initial involvement from minority regions was more cautious. The government responded with a deadly crackdown, including the use of lethal force, mass arrests, and internet blackouts to suppress dissent and conceal its actions. The protests evolved from economic grievances into broader demands for political change and respect for human rights, reflecting deep public discontent with decades of repression and economic hardship.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 3 23/05/2026 11:19:43

The protests and uprisings in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages. The unrest started in Tehran, initiated by bazaar merchants, small business owners, and wage earners, before spreading to over 200 cities, including Esfahan, Hamadan, Babol, and southern cities like Fasa. The economic hardship was exacerbated by international sanctions, government mismanagement, and the recent 12-day war with Israel in June 2025, which further strained the country's infrastructure and economy.

Protesters, initially focused on economic grievances, quickly expanded their demands to include political change, chanting slogans against Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei and calling for an end to the clerical regime. The demonstrations were met with a violent crackdown by security forces, resulting in a significant number of casualties and the shutdown of internet access to conceal the scale of the repression. The protests reflected broad public discontent, with participants from various social groups—including students, workers, and ethnic minorities—joining the movement, though their demands remained fragmented.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 4 23/05/2026 11:20:05

The protests in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the historic collapse of the Iranian rial—reaching 1.45 million rials per USD—and hyperinflation exceeding 42%. The unrest started in Tehran's Grand Bazaar, a historic center of economic and political activism, before spreading rapidly to over 200 cities, including Isfahan, Mashhad, Ahvaz, and regions in Lorestan and Kurdistan. The demonstrations initially focused on economic hardship, such as soaring food prices and currency depreciation, but quickly evolved into broader political demands, with protesters chanting slogans against the government and calling for systemic change. Participants included merchants, students, truck drivers, and ordinary citizens, reflecting widespread dissatisfaction with both economic conditions and political repression. The government responded with a heavy crackdown, including mass arrests, lethal force, and internet blackouts, leading to thousands of deaths and injuries.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 5 23/05/2026 11:20:22

The protests in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation (reaching 42% in December 2025), and widespread shortages. These conditions were exacerbated by international sanctions and government mismanagement, leading to public outrage over rising living costs and economic hardship. The unrest started in Tehran's Grand Bazaar among merchants, small business owners, and wage earners, then rapidly spread to over 200 cities, including Esfahan, Hamadan, Babol, and southern cities like Fasa. Protesters, initially focused on economic grievances, soon expanded their demands to political change, chanting slogans against the government and Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei, and calling for an end to the regime's repression and foreign policy priorities, such as "Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran".

The protests involved a broad cross-section of Iranian society, including bazaar merchants, students, salaried workers, and urban poor, reflecting widespread dissatisfaction with both economic conditions and political repression. The government responded with a heavy crackdown, including the use of lethal force, mass arrests, and internet blackouts to suppress dissent and conceal its actions. The scale of the crackdown was unprecedented, with internal estimates suggesting thousands of casualties in the first days alone. The uprisings were the largest since the 1979 Islamic Revolution, highlighting the depth of public discontent and the regime's struggle to maintain control.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 6 23/05/2026 11:20:39

The protests in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the historic collapse of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages. The unrest started in Tehran's Grand Bazaar, a historic center of economic and political activism, and quickly spread to over 200 cities, including Isfahan, Mashhad, Ahvaz, and regions in Lorestan and Kurdistan. The demonstrations initially focused on economic hardship but rapidly evolved into broader political demands, with protesters chanting slogans against the government, Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei, and calling for systemic change. Participants included merchants, students, workers, and ordinary citizens, reflecting deep frustration with economic mismanagement, political repression, and social inequality. The government responded with force, leading to mass arrests and a deadly crackdown, while also attempting to frame the protests as driven solely by economic grievances rather than political dissent.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 7 23/05/2026 11:21:03

The protests and uprisings in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the historic collapse of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages. The unrest started in Tehran's Grand Bazaar, a historic center of economic and political activism, and quickly spread to over 200 cities, including Isfahan, Mashhad, Ahvaz, and regions in Lorestan and Kurdistan. The immediate catalyst was the currency's plummet to record lows—reaching approximately 145,000 Iranian toman per US dollar—and an inflation rate of 42% in December 2025, exacerbated by international sanctions and government mismanagement.

The protests involved a broad cross-section of society: merchants, students, workers, and ordinary citizens. Initially focused on economic hardship, the demonstrations rapidly evolved into political demands, with protesters chanting anti-government slogans such as “Death to the dictator” and “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran,” criticizing both domestic policies and foreign interventions. The movement also saw support from truck drivers, who had previously struck in May 2025, and shopkeepers in several provinces.

The Iranian government responded with a heavy crackdown, including mass arrests, internet shutdowns, and the use of lethal force, resulting in thousands of deaths and injuries. The protests reflected deep public frustration with political repression, social inequality, and the regime's legitimacy, marking one of the largest uprisings since the 1979 Islamic Revolution.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 8 23/05/2026 11:21:24

The protests and uprisings in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the historic collapse of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages. The unrest started in Tehran's Grand Bazaar, a historic center of economic and political activism, and quickly spread to over 200 cities, including Isfahan, Mashhad, Ahvaz, and regions in Lorestan and Kurdistan. The immediate catalyst was the currency's plummet to record lows—reaching approximately 145,000 toman per US dollar—and an inflation rate of 42% in December 2025, exacerbating public frustration over long-standing sanctions, government mismanagement, and rising unemployment.

The protests involved a broad cross-section of Iranian society, including merchants, students, workers, and ordinary citizens. Initially focused on economic hardship, the demonstrations rapidly evolved into political demands, with protesters chanting anti-government slogans such as “Death to the dictator” and “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran,” reflecting wider discontent with the regime’s foreign policy and domestic repression. The government responded with a heavy crackdown, including mass arrests, internet shutdowns, and the use of lethal force, resulting in thousands of deaths and injuries.

The uprisings highlighted a deep legitimacy crisis for the Islamic Republic, as public trust in the government had eroded since the 2022 crackdown on the Woman, Life, Freedom movement and previous protests. The scale and intensity of the December 2025 protests made them the largest since the 1979 Islamic Revolution.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 9 23/05/2026 11:21:40

The protests in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages. The unrest started in Tehran, particularly among bazaar merchants, small business owners, and wage earners, before spreading to over 200 cities across all 31 provinces. The economic hardship was exacerbated by international sanctions and government mismanagement, leading to public anger over rising prices and currency collapse. Protesters, including students, workers, and ordinary citizens, initially demanded economic relief but quickly expanded their calls to include political reform, greater freedoms, and even the downfall of the ruling system. Slogans such as “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran” and “Death to the dictator” reflected broader discontent with both domestic policies and foreign interventions.

The Iranian government responded with a mix of repression, including lethal force, mass arrests, and internet blackouts, as well as some technocratic reshuffling, such as appointing a new central bank governor. The protests, which continued into early 2026, represented the largest uprising since the 1979 Islamic Revolution, with reports of thousands of deaths and widespread civil unrest.

1-IRN-EN: Repetition 10 23/05/2026 11:21:58

The protests in Iran that began on December 28, 2025, were triggered by a severe economic crisis, marked by the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages. The unrest started in Tehran, particularly among bazaar merchants, small business owners, and wage earners, before spreading to over 200 cities across all 31 provinces. The immediate catalyst was the collapse of the rial, which fell from 1.07 million to 1.4 million per US dollar in just weeks, making imports and daily goods unaffordable for many Iranians. The protests quickly expanded beyond economic grievances, with demonstrators chanting anti-government slogans and demanding political reform, greater freedoms, and accountability for long-standing repression and mismanagement.

The movement involved a broad cross-section of society, including students, workers, and ordinary citizens, reflecting deep frustration with both economic hardship and political repression. The government responded with a mix of selective coercion, internet blackouts, and technocratic reshuffling, such as appointing a new central bank governor. Security forces used lethal force, resulting in thousands of deaths and mass arrests, according to internal and international reports. The protests represented the largest uprising in Iran since the 1979 Islamic Revolution, highlighting both the scale of public discontent and the regime's determination to maintain control.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 1 24/05/2026 10:14:13

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" Protests began on December 28, 2025, amid a sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages, spreading to over 200 cities and marking the largest uprising in Iran since the 1979 Islamic Revolution. [Wikipedia] [Al Jazeera]

2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters as Unrest Spreads to 17 Provinces" Authorities respond with tear gas, mass arrests, and lethal force as demonstrations escalate from economic grievances to demands for political change, with at least one paramilitary officer killed in Lorestan province. [Al Jazeera] [GOV.UK] [OHCHR]

3. "UN Experts Condemn Human Rights Violations as Iran's Protests Enter Second Week" UN human rights experts urge Iran to break the cycle of violence and protect protesters, citing reports of lethal force, internet shutdowns, and coerced confessions. [OHCHR]

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 2 24/05/2026 10:16:27

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

-
- 1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Protests began on December 28, 2025, amid a sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages, spreading to over 200 cities and marking the largest uprising since the Islamic Revolution.
 - 2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters as Unrest Spreads to 17 Provinces, Internet Blackout Imposed" – Authorities responded with lethal force and mass arrests, and by January 2026, cut all internet access to conceal their actions, according to Amnesty International and independent journalists.
 - 3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar and Major Commercial Centers Shut Down in Defiance as Anti-Government Protests Enter Third Day" – What started as a strike against currency devaluation rapidly evolved into a political uprising targeting Iran's clerical establishment, with protests reported in Tehran, Mashhad, and other major cities.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 3 24/05/2026 10:16:50

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Protests began on December 28, 2025, amid a sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages, spreading to over 200 cities and marking the largest uprising since the 1979 Islamic Revolution.
2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters as Unrest Spreads to 71 Cities, Internet Blackout Imposed" – Authorities responded with lethal force and a near-total internet shutdown starting January 8, 2026, to conceal the crackdown on demonstrations demanding fundamental change and respect for human rights.
3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar and Commercial Centers Become Epicenters of Anti-Government Protests, Targeting Supreme Leader Khamenei" – What began as a strike against currency devaluation rapidly evolved into a political uprising, with merchants and citizens defiantly challenging the clerical establishment.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 4 24/05/2026 10:17:10

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Protests began on December 28, 2025, amid a sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages, spreading to over 200 cities and marking the largest uprising in decades.
2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters as Unrest Spreads to 17 Provinces, Internet Blackout Imposed" – Authorities responded with lethal force and mass arrests, and by January 2026, internet access was cut to conceal the crackdown, as protests demanded fundamental political change and respect for human rights.
3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar and Major Commercial Centers Shut Down in Defiance as Anti-Government Protests Target Supreme Leader Khamenei" – What began as a strike against currency devaluation rapidly evolved into a political uprising, challenging the clerical establishment and shattering the regime's illusion of stability.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 5 24/05/2026 10:17:30

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Thousands take to the streets in over 200 cities, demanding fundamental change amid currency collapse and soaring inflation.
2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters with Lethal Force as Internet Blackout Hits Country" – UN experts condemn human rights violations as authorities cut internet access to conceal deadly repression of demonstrations.
3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar and Major Cities Shut Down as Anti-Government Protests Target Supreme Leader Khamenei" – Strikes and clashes escalate, marking a historic rupture between the Iranian people and the clerical establishment.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 6 24/05/2026 10:17:52

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Protests began on December 28, 2025, amid a sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages, spreading to over 200 cities and marking the largest uprising since the 1979 Islamic Revolution.
2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters as Unrest Spreads to 71 Cities, Internet Blackout Imposed" – Authorities responded with lethal force and mass arrests, and since January 8, 2026, have cut internet access to conceal their actions, according to Amnesty International and BBC Verify.
3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar and Commercial Centers Become Epicenters of Anti-Government Protests, Targeting Supreme Leader Khamenei" – What began as a strike against currency devaluation rapidly evolved into a political uprising, challenging the highest levels of Iran's clerical establishment.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 7 24/05/2026 10:18:12

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Thousands take to the streets in over 200 cities, demanding fundamental change amid currency collapse and soaring inflation.
2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters with Lethal Force as Unrest Spreads to 71 Cities" – UN experts condemn human rights violations as authorities cut internet access to conceal the crackdown.
3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar Shuts Down in Defiance as Anti-Government Protests Target Supreme Leader Khamenei" – Merchants and citizens unite in strike action, escalating economic grievances into a political uprising.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 8 24/05/2026 10:18:36

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Protests began on December 28, 2025, amid a sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial, soaring inflation, and widespread shortages, spreading to over 200 cities and marking the largest uprising in Iran since the 1979 Islamic Revolution.
2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters as Unrest Spreads to 71 Cities, Internet Blackout Imposed" – Authorities responded with lethal force and mass arrests, and since January 8, 2026, have cut all internet access to conceal their actions, according to Amnesty International.
3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar and Major Commercial Centers Become Epicenters of Anti-Government Protests, Targeting Supreme Leader Khamenei" – What began as a strike against currency devaluation rapidly evolved into a political uprising, challenging the highest levels of Iran's clerical establishment.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 9 24/05/2026 10:19:02

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

-
1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Thousands take to the streets across 200 cities, chanting "Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran" amid currency collapse and soaring inflation.
 2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters as Death Toll Rises and Internet Blackout Intensifies" – UN experts condemn lethal force and mass arrests as authorities cut internet access to conceal abuses during the December 2025 uprisings.
 3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar Shuts Down: Merchants Lead Strike Against Currency Devaluation, Igniting Political Uprising" – Anti-government protests target Iran's clerical establishment as economic grievances turn into a broader challenge to the regime.

2-IRN-EN: Repetition 10 24/05/2026 10:19:24

Here are three news headlines about the protests and uprisings in Iran that started in December 2025:

1. "Nationwide Uprising Erupts in Iran as Economic Crisis Sparks Largest Protests Since 1979 Revolution" – Thousands take to the streets in over 200 cities, demanding fundamental change and an end to decades of repression amid currency collapse and soaring inflation.
2. "Iranian Security Forces Crack Down on Protesters with Lethal Force as Unrest Spreads to 71 Cities" – UN experts condemn human rights violations as authorities use live ammunition, tear gas, and internet blackouts to suppress demonstrations.
3. "Tehran's Grand Bazaar Shuts Down in Defiance as Anti-Government Protests Target Supreme Leader Khamenei" – Merchants and citizens unite in strike action, escalating economic grievances into a political challenge to Iran's clerical rulers.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 1 26/05/2026 10:39:58

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, groups of protesters disrupted public order through a variety of direct actions. In the early days, truck drivers in Bandar Abbas initiated protests by blocking roads and ports, expressing discontent over low wages, high insurance costs, and anticipated fuel price hikes. As unrest spread, demonstrations erupted in major cities like Tehran, Qeshm, Zanzan, and Hamadan, with protesters targeting symbolic and economic hubs such as the Alaeddin Shopping Centre. Authorities responded with tear gas and arrests, detaining at least 30 people in Tehran for "disturbing public order". [\[GOV.UK\]](#) [\[Wikipedia\]](#)

The protests quickly escalated into broader civil disobedience, with merchants in Tehran's central bazaar closing shops en masse to protest the collapse of the Iranian rial and soaring inflation. The economic grievances fueled widespread defiance, leading to chants against government policies and foreign interventions, such as "Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran." The scale of the protests forced the closure of schools and offices in 26 of Iran's 31 provinces, as the government sought to contain the unrest and restore a fragile calm. The disruption of public order was marked by both spontaneous and organized actions, including road blockades, mass gatherings, and the shutdown of commercial activities, all of which challenged the state's authority and stability. [\[Wikipedia\]](#) [\[Iran International\]](#)

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 2 26/05/2026 10:41:43

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, groups of protesters significantly disrupted public order through coordinated and widespread actions. Demonstrations began in late December 2025, primarily in response to economic hardship, soaring inflation, and the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial. Protesters, including truck drivers, bazaar merchants, and urban middle-class citizens, blocked roads, ports, and major commercial centers, such as the Alaeddin Shopping Centre in Tehran. These blockades paralyzed daily commerce and transportation, amplifying economic strain and drawing public attention to the crisis.

As unrest spread across cities like Qeshm, Zanzan, and Hamadan, protesters also engaged in mass gatherings, chanting slogans against government policies and foreign interventions. The scale of the protests forced authorities to close schools and offices in 26 of Iran's 31 provinces for four days, a measure intended to curb open unrest but which also highlighted the breadth of public dissent. The government responded with arrests, detaining at least 30 people in Tehran for “disturbing public order,” and used tear gas to disperse crowds, further escalating tensions. The protests’ intensity and geographic spread underscored a deepening crisis of legitimacy for the Iranian regime.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 3 26/05/2026 10:42:18

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, protesters employed a range of disruptive tactics to challenge public order. Groups of demonstrators, initially sparked by economic hardship and the collapse of the Iranian rial, quickly escalated their actions beyond peaceful marches. In urban centers like Tehran, protesters blocked major roads and ports, particularly in areas with high concentrations of truck drivers and bazaar merchants, who were among the first to mobilize. These blockades caused significant transportation and commercial disruptions, amplifying the economic strain already felt by the population.

As the protests spread, demonstrators also targeted symbolic and economic hubs, such as the Alaeddin Shopping Centre, where law enforcement used tear gas to disperse crowds. The unrest extended to multiple regions, including Qeshm, Zanjan, and Hamadan, with reports of nighttime gatherings and coordinated actions to evade security forces. The government responded by closing schools and offices in 26 of Iran’s 31 provinces for four days, a move seen as an attempt to suppress open unrest and restore a fragile calm.

The protests were marked by defiance of state authority, with some participants chanting slogans against the government’s foreign policy and economic mismanagement. The scale and coordination of these actions, combined with the use of social media and the internet—before access was restricted—helped sustain the momentum of the uprisings, posing a direct challenge to public order and the regime’s legitimacy.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 4 26/05/2026 10:42:42

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, groups of protesters employed various tactics to disrupt public order. The unrest began amid economic hardship, soaring inflation, and the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial. Protesters, including truck drivers, blocked roads and ports in cities like Bandar Abbas, expressing discontent over low salaries, high insurance rates, and anticipated fuel price hikes. In Tehran, demonstrations led to the closure of shops in the central bazaar, and protests spread rapidly to other regions, including Qeshm, Zanjan, and Hamadan. Authorities reported dozens of arrests, with at least 30 people detained in Tehran for “disturbing public order” as protesters clashed with security forces, who used tear gas to disperse crowds.

The scale of the protests was such that schools and offices in 26 of Iran’s 31 provinces were closed for four days, a move seen as an attempt to curb open unrest. The government also faced organized violence, including what it described as terrorist attacks against law enforcement, further escalating tensions and leading to a brutal crackdown, including the use of live ammunition and mass arrests. The protests thus not only disrupted daily life but also challenged the regime’s authority, prompting a severe and often violent response.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 5 26/05/2026 10:43:03

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, groups of protesters disrupted public order through a variety of direct actions. In the early days, truck drivers in Bandar Abbas initiated protests by blocking major roads and ports, expressing discontent over low wages, high insurance costs, and anticipated fuel price hikes. As unrest spread, demonstrations erupted in urban centers like Tehran, Qeshm, Zanzan, and Hamadan, with protesters targeting symbolic and economic hubs such as the Alaeddin Shopping Centre. Authorities responded with tear gas and arrests, detaining at least 30 people in Tehran for “disturbing public order”.

The protests quickly escalated into broader civil disobedience, with merchants in Tehran’s central bazaar closing shops en masse to protest the collapse of the Iranian rial and soaring inflation. The economic grievances fueled widespread defiance, leading to chants against government policies and foreign interventions, such as “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran.” The government’s attempt to contain the unrest included closing schools and offices in 26 of Iran’s 31 provinces, a move seen as an effort to suppress open dissent. The scale and coordination of these actions significantly disrupted daily life and challenged state authority.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 6 26/05/2026 10:43:27

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, groups of protesters disrupted public order through a variety of direct actions. The unrest began as a response to economic hardship, including soaring inflation and the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial. Protesters, initially led by bazaar merchants and small business owners, quickly expanded to include students and the urban middle class. They employed tactics such as blocking roads and ports, particularly in cities like Bandar Abbas, where truck drivers protested low salaries and high insurance rates. In Tehran, demonstrations outside major commercial centers like the Alaeddin Shopping Centre led to clashes with law enforcement, who used tear gas to disperse crowds. The protests spread rapidly across multiple regions, including Qeshm, Zanzan, and Hamadan, with participants chanting slogans against government policies and foreign interventions, such as “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran”.

The scale and coordination of these actions significantly disrupted daily life, forcing the closure of schools and offices in 26 of Iran’s 31 provinces for several days. The government attempted to restore calm, but the widespread nature of the protests and the defiance of protesters—who often ignored permits and restrictions—highlighted the depth of public dissatisfaction and the challenge to state authority.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 7 26/05/2026 10:43:49

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, groups of protesters disrupted public order through a variety of direct actions. In the early days, truck drivers in Bandar Abbas initiated protests by blocking roads and ports, expressing discontent over low wages, high insurance costs, and anticipated fuel price hikes. As unrest spread, demonstrations erupted in major cities like Tehran, Qeshm, Zanzan, and Hamadan, with protesters targeting symbolic and economic hubs. In Tehran, law enforcement used tear gas to disperse crowds gathered outside the Alaeddin Shopping Centre, indicating the scale and intensity of the gatherings. The protests quickly evolved from economic grievances to broader political demands, with chants such as “Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran” reflecting widespread frustration with government priorities and foreign policy.

The government responded by detaining at least 30 people in Tehran for “disturbing public order,” though the actual number of arrests was likely higher. Authorities also closed schools and offices in 26 of Iran’s 31 provinces for four days, a move seen as an attempt to suppress open unrest and restore a fragile calm. The protests’ geographic spread and the involvement of diverse social groups—from bazaar merchants to students—further strained public order, leading to violent crackdowns and mass arrests.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 8 26/05/2026 10:44:11

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, groups of protesters disrupted public order through a variety of direct actions. In the early days, truck drivers in Bandar Abbas initiated protests by blocking major roads and ports, crippling transportation and commerce in response to low wages, high insurance costs, and anticipated fuel price hikes. As unrest spread, demonstrations erupted in urban centers like Tehran, Qeshm, Zanjan, and Hamadan, where protesters clashed with security forces. Authorities reported detaining at least 30 individuals in Tehran for “disturbing public order,” though the actual number of arrests was likely higher. Protesters also targeted symbolic and economic hubs, such as the Alaeddin Shopping Centre, where law enforcement used tear gas to disperse crowds. The scale of the protests forced the closure of schools and offices in 26 of Iran’s 31 provinces for four days, as the government sought to contain the unrest and restore a fragile calm.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 9 26/05/2026 10:44:31

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, protesters employed a range of tactics that significantly disrupted public order. Demonstrations began in late December 2025, primarily in response to economic hardship, soaring inflation, and the sharp depreciation of the Iranian rial. Groups of protesters, including truck drivers, bazaar merchants, and urban middle-class citizens, organized large-scale gatherings that often escalated into direct confrontations with security forces.

Protesters blocked major roads, ports, and commercial centers, particularly in cities like Bandar Abbas and Tehran, crippling transportation and economic activity. In Tehran, reports indicated that at least 30 individuals were detained specifically for “disturbing public order” as they participated in these disruptive actions. The unrest spread rapidly, with protests reported in multiple regions, including Qeshm, Zanjan, and Hamadan. Security forces responded with tear gas and, in some cases, live ammunition, leading to violent clashes and further destabilizing public order. The government also attempted to control the narrative by labeling demonstrators as foreign agents and restricting internet access to obscure the scale of the protests and repression.

3-IRN-EN: Repetition 10 26/05/2026 10:44:52

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, protesters employed a range of disruptive tactics that significantly challenged public order. The unrest began as a response to economic hardship, including soaring inflation and the collapse of the Iranian rial, but quickly escalated into widespread civil disobedience. In urban centers like Tehran, demonstrators blocked major roads and ports, particularly in areas such as Bandar Abbas, where truck drivers led actions to protest low wages and rising costs. These blockades not only paralyzed transportation and commerce but also symbolized broader resistance against government policies.

Protests spread rapidly, with merchants in Tehran's central bazaar closing shops en masse, and crowds gathering outside key locations like the Alaeddin Shopping Centre, where law enforcement used tear gas to disperse demonstrators. The scale of the protests prompted authorities to close schools and offices in 26 of Iran's 31 provinces for four days, an attempt to curb open unrest and restore a fragile calm. The government also reported detaining at least 30 people in Tehran for "disturbing public order," though the actual number of arrests was likely higher.

The protests were marked by defiance of state authority, with some participants chanting slogans linking economic grievances to broader political demands, such as "Neither Gaza nor Lebanon, My Life for Iran." This wave of unrest, while largely leaderless, demonstrated a high degree of spontaneity and geographic spread, disrupting daily life and challenging the regime's control over public spaces.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 1 27/05/2026 09:44:52

During the protests that began in Iran on December 28, 2025, security forces responded with extreme violence, employing live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and attacks on hospitals to suppress dissent. Reports from Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch confirm that at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed in 13 cities across eight provinces between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026. Security forces indiscriminately shot at crowds, chased, beat, and arrested thousands, with Kurdish and Luri ethnic minority regions experiencing some of the deadliest repression. The crackdown also included violent assaults on hospitals to detain the wounded, actions that have been described as crimes against humanity under international law. [Amnesty International] [Center for Human Rights in Iran]

The United Nations Human Rights Council strongly condemned the brutal repression, noting the deaths of thousands, including children, and the arrest of thousands more. The Council extended the mandate of its Fact-Finding Mission to investigate these abuses, which included the unlawful use of force, firearms, and widespread arbitrary detentions. [OHCHR] The pattern of repression was reminiscent of previous uprisings, such as the 2022 Woman Life Freedom movement, but reached unprecedented levels in its scale and coordination, with evidence suggesting a systematic policy of repression by the state. [Amnesty International] [OHCHR]

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 2 27/05/2026 09:47:20

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to human rights organizations, authorities unleashed a deadly crackdown, using live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and violent assaults—even targeting hospitals to detain the wounded. Between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026, at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed across 13 cities in eight provinces. The provinces of Lorestan and Ilam, home to Kurdish and Luri minorities, saw some of the deadliest repression, with multiple fatalities reported. Security forces shot indiscriminately at crowds, chased and beat protesters, and arrested thousands, with reports of over 2,000 detentions. The crackdown was marked by the unlawful use of firearms, tear gas, and physical abuse, reminiscent of previous uprisings like the 2022 Woman, Life, Freedom movement. The UN and Amnesty International condemned these actions as potential crimes against humanity, noting the systematic and coordinated nature of the repression, which included internet blackouts to conceal the scale of abuses.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 3 27/05/2026 09:47:40

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to human rights organizations, authorities used live ammunition, indiscriminately shooting at protesters and bystanders, including children, in cities across multiple provinces. Between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026, at least 28 people were killed, with Kurdish and Luri minority regions experiencing some of the deadliest repression. Security forces also carried out mass arbitrary arrests, detaining thousands, and conducted violent assaults on hospitals to capture the wounded, actions that have been described as crimes against humanity under international law.

The crackdown included the use of tear gas, beatings, and close-range gunshot wounds, with reports of victims arriving at hospitals with severe injuries. The government imposed a nationwide internet blackout to conceal the scale of the repression, making it difficult to verify the full extent of the violence. The UN Human Rights Council and Amnesty International have both condemned the brutal suppression, noting that the pattern of abuse mirrors previous uprisings, such as the 2022 Woman, Life, Freedom movement. The violence has been characterized as systematic, widespread, and coordinated, with security forces acting under direct orders from senior officials.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 4 27/05/2026 09:48:03

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to human rights organizations, authorities unleashed a deadly crackdown, using live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and violent assaults on hospitals to detain the wounded. Between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026, at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed across 13 cities in eight provinces. The provinces of Lorestan and Ilam, home to Kurdish and Luri minorities, experienced some of the deadliest repression, with at least eight and five killed, respectively. Security forces shot indiscriminately at protesters, chased and beat them, and arrested thousands, with reports of over 2,000 detentions. The crackdown was marked by the unlawful use of force, including firing at civilians from close range and attacking medical facilities, actions that have been described as crimes against humanity under international law.

The United Nations and Amnesty International have strongly condemned these actions, noting that the repression was both systematic and widespread, targeting not only protesters but also bystanders and even children. The government also imposed internet blackouts to conceal the extent of the violence, further isolating the population and preventing the documentation of abuses.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 5 27/05/2026 09:48:24

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to nationwide protests with extreme violence, employing live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and brutal beatings against civilians. Reports from Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch document the killing of at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, in 13 cities across eight provinces between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026. Security forces shot indiscriminately at crowds, chased and arrested thousands, and even targeted hospitals to detain the wounded, actions that have been described as crimes against humanity under international law.

The crackdown was particularly severe in Kurdish and Luri minority regions, such as Lorestan and Ilam, where the highest numbers of deaths were recorded. Authorities also imposed a nationwide internet blackout to conceal the scale of the repression, with some estimates suggesting over 2,600 deaths by mid-January 2026. The UN Human Rights Council and other international bodies have strongly condemned the violent repression, calling for urgent investigations into the abuses and the potential legal accountability of Iranian officials.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 6 27/05/2026 09:48:46

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch, authorities unleashed a deadly crackdown, using live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and violent assaults—even targeting hospitals to detain the wounded. Between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026, at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed across 13 cities in eight provinces. Kurdish and Luri ethnic minority regions, such as Lorestan and Ilam, experienced some of the deadliest repression, with multiple fatalities reported in each. Security forces shot indiscriminately at crowds, chased and beat protesters, and arrested thousands, with reports of over 2,000 detentions. The UN Human Rights Council strongly condemned the violent repression, noting thousands of deaths and injuries, and extended the mandate of its Fact-Finding Mission to investigate these abuses, which may amount to crimes against humanity.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 7 27/05/2026 09:49:14

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to human rights organizations, authorities unleashed a deadly crackdown, using live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and violent assaults on hospitals to detain the wounded. Between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026, at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed in 13 cities across eight provinces. The provinces of Lorestan and Ilam, home to Kurdish and Luri minorities, saw some of the deadliest repression, with at least eight and five killed, respectively. Security forces shot indiscriminately at protesters, chased and beat them, and arrested thousands, with reports of over 2,000 detentions. The crackdown was marked by the unlawful use of force and firearms, and the UN Human Rights Council strongly deplored the violent repression, which resulted in thousands of deaths and injuries, including among children.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 8 27/05/2026 09:49:40

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to human rights organizations, authorities unleashed a deadly crackdown, using live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and violent assaults—even targeting hospitals to detain the wounded. Between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026, at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed across 13 cities in eight provinces. The provinces of Lorestan and Ilam, home to Kurdish and Luri minorities, saw some of the deadliest repression, with at least eight and five killed, respectively. Security forces shot indiscriminately at crowds, chased, beat, and arrested thousands, with over 2,000 detainees reported in the first weeks alone. The UN and Amnesty International condemned these actions as potential crimes against humanity, noting the use of excessive force, internet blackouts to conceal abuses, and attacks on medical facilities. The crackdown mirrored patterns seen in previous uprisings, such as the 2022 Woman, Life, Freedom movement, but escalated in brutality and scale, with thousands estimated dead by early 2026.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 9 27/05/2026 09:50:05

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to human rights organizations, authorities unleashed a deadly crackdown, using live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and violent assaults—even targeting hospitals to detain the wounded. Between December 31, 2025, and early January 2026, at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed across 13 cities in eight provinces. The provinces of Lorestan and Ilam, home to Kurdish and Luri minorities, experienced some of the deadliest repression, with multiple fatalities reported in each. Security forces shot indiscriminately at crowds, chased and beat protesters, and arrested thousands, with reports of over 2,000 detentions. The crackdown was marked by the unlawful use of firearms, tear gas, and physical abuse, often reminiscent of the brutal repression seen during the 2022 Woman, Life, Freedom uprising. The UN and Amnesty International have condemned these actions, noting that the scale and coordination of the violence may constitute crimes against humanity.

4-IRN-EN: Repetition 10 27/05/2026 09:50:25

During the December 2025 uprisings in Iran, security forces responded to widespread protests with extreme violence. According to human rights organizations, Iranian authorities unleashed a deadly crackdown, using live ammunition, mass arbitrary arrests, and violent assaults on hospitals to detain the wounded. Between December 31, 2025, and January 3, 2026, at least 28 protesters and bystanders, including children, were killed in 13 cities across eight provinces. The provinces of Lorestan and Ilam, home to Kurdish and Luri minorities, saw the deadliest repression, with at least eight and five killed, respectively. Security forces shot indiscriminately at protesters, chased, arrested, and beat them, echoing the brutal tactics of the 2022 Woman, Life, Freedom uprising. The crackdown also included attacks on hospitals and a nationwide internet blackout to conceal the abuses. The UN Human Rights Council and Amnesty International condemned these actions, describing them as potential crimes against humanity, and called for urgent investigations into the thousands of deaths, injuries, and arrests reported during the protests.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 1 28/05/2026 10:30:13

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space and hub for left-wing and autonomous movements. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 people from across Italy gathered in Turin to demonstrate solidarity with Askatasuna, which had operated for nearly 30 years before its closure. The protests were organized by a coalition of groups, including the No Tav movement, student committees, and citizens' associations, who viewed the eviction as part of a broader crackdown on dissent and community spaces. [Il Sole 24 Ore] [Freedom News] [Abolitionist Futures] [Brussels Signal]

The demonstrations began peacefully but escalated into violent clashes between protesters and police. A subset of around 1,500 protesters, some from France and northern Europe, engaged in urban guerrilla tactics, throwing bottles, stones, and incendiary devices, and setting fires. Police responded with tear gas and water cannons, resulting in over 100 officers injured and several arrests. The government, led by Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni, condemned the violence as unacceptable and fast-tracked a security decree in response. [Euronews] [Fox News] [Brussels Signal]

The protests were rooted in opposition to the eviction of Askatasuna, seen by supporters as a vital community space, and against what they perceived as repressive government policies toward dissent and social movements. [Il Sole 24 Ore] [Freedom News] [Abolitionist Futures] [Brussels Signal]

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 2 28/05/2026 10:33:10

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space and hub for left-wing and autonomous movements since the 1990s. On January 31, 2026, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists, students, and citizens from across Italy and even abroad—gathered in Turin to protest the closure. The demonstrations were organized by various groups, such as the No Tav movement, student committees, and citizens' associations, who viewed the eviction as part of a broader crackdown on dissent and community spaces.

The protests began peacefully but escalated into violent clashes between a minority of demonstrators and police. Protesters threw bottles, stones, and incendiary devices, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 police officers were injured, and several arrests were made. The government, led by Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni, condemned the violence as unacceptable and fast-tracked a new security decree in response.

The Askatasuna protests thus reflected tensions over the right to occupy and self-manage public spaces, government policies on dissent, and the policing of public demonstrations in Italy.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 3 28/05/2026 10:33:32

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction and closure of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space occupied by far-left activists for nearly three decades. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists from across Italy and Europe—gathered in Turin to protest the eviction and what they saw as increasingly repressive government policies under Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni. The march, organized by various left-wing groups, student committees, and citizens' associations, initially proceeded peacefully but escalated into violent clashes between a subset of protesters and police.

The violence included the throwing of Molotov cocktails, stones, smoke bombs, and the use of street furniture as weapons. Police responded with tear gas, water cannons, and formed cordons to block the protesters. Over 100 police officers were injured, with one officer reportedly beaten with a hammer in an incident described by Meloni as an “attempted murder.” The protests were not only a reaction to the eviction but also a broader expression of dissent against government policies perceived as authoritarian and anti-democratic by the demonstrators.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 4 28/05/2026 10:33:53

In January 2026, large protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space occupied by far-left activists for nearly 30 years. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists from across Italy and Europe—gathered in Turin to protest the closure and what they saw as increasingly repressive government policies. The march, organized by various left-wing groups, student committees, and citizens' associations, began peacefully but escalated into violent clashes with police in the evening. Protesters threw Molotov cocktails, stones, and smoke bombs, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 police officers were injured, one seriously after being attacked with a hammer, which Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni condemned as an “attempted murder.” The government framed the events as “urban terrorism,” while critics argued this was a tactic to delegitimize dissent. The protests highlighted tensions over the eviction, seen by supporters as an attack on community spaces and political freedom, and by authorities as a necessary response to illegal occupation and violence.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 5 28/05/2026 10:34:12

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space occupied by far-left and anarchist activists for nearly 30 years. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists from across Italy and Europe—gathered in Turin to protest the closure, which they viewed as part of broader repressive policies by Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni's government. The march, initially peaceful, escalated into violent clashes between a subset of protesters and police. Demonstrators threw Molotov cocktails, stones, and smoke bombs, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 officers were injured, one seriously after being struck with a hammer, an incident Meloni condemned as “attempted murder.” The protests were organized by a coalition of left-wing groups, student committees, and citizens' associations, who framed the eviction as an attack on community spaces and democratic dissent. The events sparked national debate on political extremism, public security, and the boundaries of protest in Italy.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 6 28/05/2026 10:34:32

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space occupied by far-left activists for nearly 30 years. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists from across Italy and Europe—gathered in Turin to protest the closure and what they saw as increasingly repressive government policies under Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni. The march, organized by various left-wing groups, student committees, and citizens, began peacefully but escalated into violent clashes between a subset of protesters and police. Demonstrators threw Molotov cocktails, stones, smoke bombs, and set fires, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 police officers were injured, one severely after being attacked with a hammer, which Meloni condemned as an “attempted murder”.

The protests were rooted in opposition to the eviction of Askatasuna, which had served as a community hub and symbol of grassroots activism. Activists framed the eviction as part of a broader crackdown on dissent and social spaces, while the government and local authorities defended the action as necessary for public order and security. The events sparked a national debate on political extremism, the boundaries of protest, and the militarization of policing in Italy.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 7 28/05/2026 10:34:52

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space and hub for left-wing and autonomous movements since the 1990s. On January 31, 2026, between 20,000 and 50,000 people—including activists, students, and citizens from across Italy—gathered in Turin to protest the closure. The demonstration, supported by groups like the No Tav movement and various citizen committees, began peacefully but escalated into violent clashes with police in the Vanchiglia district, near the former Askatasuna building. Protesters threw stones, fireworks, and incendiary devices, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 officers were injured, and several arrests were made. The protests were motivated by opposition to the eviction, seen by many as part of a broader crackdown on dissent and self-organized spaces, and a call for the return of Askatasuna to the community.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 8 28/05/2026 10:35:15

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space occupied by far-left activists for nearly 30 years. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists from across Italy and Europe—gathered in Turin to protest the closure and what they saw as increasingly repressive government policies. The march, organized by various left-wing groups, student committees, and citizens' associations, initially proceeded peacefully but escalated into violent clashes between a minority of protesters and police. Demonstrators threw Molotov cocktails, stones, smoke bombs, and set fire to rubbish bins and a police vehicle, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 police officers were injured, one seriously after being beaten with a hammer, an incident Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni condemned as “attempted murder.” The protests centered on the Askatasuna building in Corso Regina Margherita, a historic hub for Italy's radical left, and reflected broader tensions over political dissent, public security, and the militarization of urban spaces.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 9 28/05/2026 10:35:33

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space occupied by far-left and anarchist activists for nearly 30 years. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists from across Italy and Europe—gathered in Turin to protest the closure, which they viewed as part of broader repressive policies by Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni's government. The march, initially peaceful, escalated into violent clashes between a minority of protesters and police. Demonstrators threw Molotov cocktails, stones, and smoke bombs, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 officers were injured, one severely after being beaten with a hammer, an incident Meloni condemned as "attempted murder".

The Askatasuna centre, located at Corso Regina 47, had been a hub for left-wing activism, community projects, and cultural initiatives. Its eviction followed incidents such as an attack on the La Stampa newspaper headquarters, which authorities cited as justification for the closure. Protesters framed the eviction as an attack on democratic spaces and social dissent, while the government described the violence as unacceptable aggression against the state. The events sparked a national debate on political extremism, public security, and the boundaries of protest in Italy.

1-ASK-EN: Repetition 10 28/05/2026 10:35:51

In January 2026, large-scale protests erupted in Turin, Italy, following the December 2025 eviction of the Askatasuna social centre, a long-standing self-managed space occupied by far-left activists for nearly 30 years. On January 31, between 20,000 and 50,000 demonstrators—including activists from across Italy and Europe—gathered in Turin to protest the closure and what they saw as increasingly repressive government policies. The march, organized by various left-wing groups, student committees, and citizens' associations, began peacefully but escalated into violent clashes between a subset of protesters and police. Demonstrators threw Molotov cocktails, stones, and smoke bombs, while police responded with tear gas and water cannons. Over 100 police officers were injured, one seriously after being beaten with a hammer, an incident Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni described as "attempted murder".

The protests were rooted in opposition to the eviction of Askatasuna, which had served as a community hub and symbol of grassroots activism. Activists framed the eviction as part of a broader crackdown on dissent and social spaces, while the government condemned the violence as an attack on the state. The events sparked a national debate on political extremism, public security, and the boundaries of protest in Italy.

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 1 29/05/2026 10:07:40

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre" [Freedom News]
2. "Violent Clashes in Turin Leave Over 100 Police Injured as Askatasuna Protests Turn to Urban Guerrilla Warfare" [Fox News] [euronews]
3. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Safety" [euronews]

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 2 29/05/2026 10:09:13

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police Over Askatasuna Social Centre Eviction" – Massive demonstrations turned violent as activists from across Italy and Europe gathered to protest the December 2025 eviction of the historic Askatasuna social centre, resulting in widespread clashes, injuries, and arrests.
2. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Violent Turin Protests Injure Over 100 Officers" – Following the January 31 protests in support of Askatasuna, the Italian government accelerates new security measures after masked protesters injured more than 100 police officers, with one attack described as "attempted murder" by Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni.
3. "Far-Left Riots Shake Italy: Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Security" – The eviction of the Askatasuna social centre in Turin triggered a national protest, drawing 20,000–50,000 activists and escalating into violent confrontations, reigniting discussions on political extremism and the boundaries of protest in Italy.

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 3 29/05/2026 10:09:36

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre"
2. "Violent Clashes in Turin Leave Over 100 Police Injured as Askatasuna Protests Turn to Urban Guerrilla Warfare"
3. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Safety"

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 4 29/05/2026 10:09:57

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre"
2. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Violent Turin Clashes Injure Over 100 Officers"
3. "Far-Left Riots Shake Italy as 20,000 Activists Rally for Askatasuna, Leaving Police Injured and City in Chaos"

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 5 29/05/2026 10:10:17

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre"
2. "Violent Clashes in Turin Leave Over 100 Police Injured as Askatasuna Protests Turn to Urban Guerrilla Warfare"
3. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Safety"

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 6 29/05/2026 10:10:35

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre" – Massive demonstrations on January 31, 2026, turned violent as protesters opposed the December eviction of the historic Askatasuna building, leading to widespread clashes and injuries.
2. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Violent Turin Protests Leave Over 100 Officers Injured" – The government responds to the chaos following the Askatasuna protests, with Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni condemning the violence as "attempted murder" and calling for urgent security measures.
3. "Far-Left Riots Shake Italy: Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Security" – The January 31 rally in Turin, drawing activists from across Europe, escalated into violent confrontations, reigniting discussions on the boundaries of protest and state response.

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 7 29/05/2026 10:10:55

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre"
2. "Violent Clashes in Turin Leave Over 100 Police Injured as Askatasuna Protests Turn to Urban Guerrilla Warfare"
3. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Safety"

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 8 29/05/2026 10:11:18

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre" – Massive demonstrations on January 31, 2026, turned violent as protesters from across Italy and Europe gathered to oppose the eviction of the historic Askatasuna social centre, resulting in widespread clashes and injuries.
2. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Violent Turin Protests Leave Over 100 Officers Injured" – Following the January 31 protests, the Italian government accelerates new security measures in response to the injuries of more than 100 police officers and the use of Molotov cocktails and homemade incendiary devices by demonstrators.
3. "Prime Minister Meloni Condemns 'Urban Terrorism' as Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism" – Giorgia Meloni denounces the violence as an attack on the state, while critics argue the government is using the unrest to delegitimize protest movements and push through controversial security laws.

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 9 29/05/2026 10:11:39

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre"
2. "Violent Clashes in Turin Leave Over 100 Police Injured as Askatasuna Protests Turn to Urban Guerrilla Warfare"
3. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Safety"

2-ASK-EN: Repetition 10 29/05/2026 10:12:01

Here are three news headlines about the Askatasuna protests in Italy that started in January 2026:

1. "Turin Erupts: 50,000 Protesters Clash with Police in Solidarity with Evicted Askatasuna Social Centre"
2. "Violent Clashes in Turin Leave Over 100 Police Injured as Askatasuna Protests Turn to Urban Guerrilla Warfare"
3. "Italy Fast-Tracks Security Decree After Askatasuna Protests Spark National Debate on Extremism and Public Safety"

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 1 30/05/2026 10:31:15

During the January 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed a wave of urban guerrilla warfare following its eviction the previous December. On January 31, 2026, a demonstration attracting 20,000 people, including anarchists and autonomists from across Italy and Europe, escalated into brutal clashes with law enforcement. Masked protesters, some organized under code names like Blu, Ugo, Kiwi, and Mango, broke away from the main march and targeted police with Molotov cocktails, flares, fireworks, stones, and homemade explosives. One officer was surrounded and beaten by a dozen assailants, while others suffered injuries from kicks, punches, and hammer blows. Over 100 police officers were injured in total, with some attacks involving nail-filled devices and electronic jammers to disrupt communications. The violence, concentrated in the Vanchiglia neighborhood, forced police to respond with tear gas, water cannons, and tight cordons to contain the rioters, who also attacked a RAI news crew and a journalist. [Il Sole 24 ORE] [L'Unione Sarda] [Fox News] [L'Unione Sarda] [USA Crime]

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 2 30/05/2026 10:33:30

During the January 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed chaos on the city's streets, escalating a demonstration against its eviction into a brutal confrontation with law enforcement. On January 31, 2026, what began as a march of thousands—including students, activists, and citizens—descended into urban guerrilla warfare in the Vanchiglia neighborhood. Masked anarchists, some organized in groups with code names like Blu, Ugo, Kiwi, and Mango, broke away from the main procession and launched coordinated attacks on police. They hurled Molotov cocktails, fireworks, stones, and homemade explosives, while also using hammers and electronic jammers to disrupt police communications. The violence left over 100 officers injured, with one officer surrounded and beaten by a dozen masked assailants, and another kicked in the head and struck with a hammer. Police responded with tear gas, water cannons, and tight cordons, but the anarchists' tactics created multiple flashpoints, turning the area into a battleground. The clashes underscored the militant resolve of Turin's far-left networks, drawing condemnation from national leaders and exposing the volatile intersection of political dissent and public order in Italy.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 3 30/05/2026 10:33:46

During the January 31, 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed chaos on the city's streets. The demonstrations, which drew around 20,000 people, began peacefully but escalated into urban guerrilla warfare as masked anarchists broke away from the main procession. These radicals, some of whom traveled from France and northern Europe, targeted law enforcement with Molotov cocktails, stones, homemade pipe flares, and smoke bombs. Police responded with tear gas and water cannons, but the violence left over 100 officers injured, with one officer surrounded and beaten by a dozen protesters, and another attacked with kicks, punches, and hammer blows. The clashes, centered in the Vanchiglia neighborhood, saw coordinated attacks by groups using code names like Blu, Ugo, Kiwi, and Mango. The unrest was a direct response to the December 2025 eviction of Askatasuna, a long-standing anarchist stronghold, and highlighted the broader network of European anarchists and far-left activists involved in the violence.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 4 30/05/2026 10:34:06

During the January 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed a wave of chaos and aggression against law enforcement. The unrest erupted on January 31, 2026, following the eviction of the Askatasuna building, a long-standing hub for far-left activists. As a national march in solidarity with Askatasuna progressed, a faction of masked anarchists and autonomists broke away, initiating a series of coordinated attacks in the Vanchiglia district. These groups, sometimes identified by code names like Blu, Ugo, Kiwi, and Mango, hurled Molotov cocktails, flares, stones, and homemade explosives at police. Officers responded with tear gas and water cannons, but the violence escalated, resulting in over 100 injured officers, some severely—including one surrounded and beaten by a dozen protesters, and another kicked in the head and struck with a hammer. The clashes continued into the night, with protesters also targeting a RAI news crew and a journalist. The events drew widespread condemnation from political leaders, including Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni, who labeled the violence as unacceptable and a threat to democracy.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 5 30/05/2026 10:34:28

During the January 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed chaos on the city's streets, targeting law enforcement with coordinated and brutal attacks. The unrest erupted on January 31, 2026, following the eviction of the Askatasuna building—a long-standing hub for far-left activists. As a march of around 20,000 people, including anarchists and autonomists, progressed through Turin, a splinter group of masked protesters broke away, initiating what was described as an “urban guerrilla war” near Corso Regina Margherita. These radicals, some identified by code names like Blu, Ugo, Kiwi, and Mango, hurled Molotov cocktails, flares, fireworks, stones, and homemade pipe bombs at police. Officers responded with tear gas and water cannons, but the violence escalated, leaving over 100 police injured—one severely after being surrounded, kicked, and struck with hammers. Journalists and media crews were also targeted, with a RAI crew attacked and a reporter hit in the leg. The clashes, which continued into the night, were condemned by political leaders, including Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni, who labeled the actions as unacceptable violence rather than legitimate dissent.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 6 30/05/2026 10:34:50

During the January 31, 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed chaos on the city's streets, transforming a demonstration into an urban guerrilla battle. The protests, which drew around 20,000 people, were organized in solidarity with Askatasuna, a long-standing anarchist hub evicted by authorities in December 2025. As the march progressed, a radical faction—comprising masked anarchists and autonomists—broke away, targeting law enforcement with Molotov cocktails, flares, fireworks, stones, and homemade explosives. Police responded with tear gas and water cannons, but the violence escalated, with officers surrounded and brutally assaulted; one was kicked in the head and struck with a hammer, while others suffered injuries from projectiles and improvised weapons. Over 100 officers were injured in total, and a RAI news crew was also attacked, with a journalist struck in the leg. The clashes, concentrated in the Vanchiglia district, revealed the coordinated tactics of the anarchists, who operated in masked groups, using code names and exploiting the cover of smoke and darkness to evade police cordons.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 7 30/05/2026 10:35:08

During the January 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed chaos on the city's streets, escalating a demonstration against its eviction into open confrontation with law enforcement. On January 31, 2026, what began as a march of 20,000 supporters—including anarchists, autonomists, and international activists—devolved into urban guerrilla warfare. Masked protesters, armed with Molotov cocktails, flares, fireworks, stones, and homemade explosives, targeted police cordons in the Vanchiglia neighborhood. One officer was surrounded and brutally assaulted by a dozen attackers, while others faced hammer blows and nail-filled devices. Over 100 officers were injured, some critically, as rioters also attacked a RAI news crew and a journalist.

The violence was not spontaneous but coordinated, with hooded groups using code names and exploiting the cover of darkness to break away from the main procession. Their tactics included setting refuse containers ablaze and deploying smoke bombs to disrupt police formations. Authorities responded with tear gas and water cannons, but the scale of the assault—described by officials as a direct threat to democracy—prompted national outrage and a swift political response, including the fast-tracking of new security measures. The events underscored Turin's role as a hub for militant left-wing networks, drawing participants from across Europe and highlighting the volatile intersection of local grievances and transnational activism.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 8 30/05/2026 10:35:31

During the January 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed chaos on the city's streets, escalating a demonstration against its eviction into a brutal confrontation with law enforcement. On January 31, 2026, what began as a march of 20,000 people—including activists, students, and citizens—descended into urban guerrilla warfare in the Vanchiglia neighborhood, where Askatasuna was located. Masked anarchists, some organized under code names like Blu, Ugo, Kiwi, and Mango, broke away from the main procession and launched coordinated attacks on police. They hurled Molotov cocktails, flares, fireworks, stones, and homemade explosives, while also using hammers and electronic jammers to disrupt police communications. The violence left over 100 officers injured, with one officer surrounded and beaten by a dozen attackers, and another kicked in the head and struck with a hammer. Police responded with tear gas, water cannons, and tight cordons, but the anarchists' tactics created multiple flashpoints of conflict, turning the area into a battleground. The clashes drew widespread condemnation, with Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni denouncing the violence as unacceptable and a threat to democracy.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 9 30/05/2026 10:35:48

During the January 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed a wave of urban guerrilla warfare, targeting law enforcement and escalating tensions to unprecedented levels. The unrest erupted on January 31, 2026, as thousands gathered to protest the recent eviction of the Askatasuna building, a long-standing hub for far-left activists. What began as a peaceful march quickly devolved into chaos when masked anarchists, some armed with Molotov cocktails, flares, and fireworks, broke away from the main procession and clashed with police. Officers responded with tear gas and water cannons, but the attackers, organized in groups with code names like Blu, Ugo, Kiwi, and Mango, persisted in their assaults, hurling stones, bottles, and homemade explosives. The violence left over 100 police officers injured, with one officer surrounded and beaten by a dozen masked protesters, and another kicked in the head and struck with a hammer. The clashes, described as guerrilla fighting, spread through Turin's Vanchiglia neighborhood, forcing police to form tight cordons to block the protesters' path. The brutality of the attacks—including the use of nail-filled explosive devices and electronic jammers—drew widespread condemnation, with Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni denouncing the violence as unacceptable and a threat to democracy.

3-ASK-EN: Repetition 10 30/05/2026 10:36:08

During the January 31, 2026 protests in Turin, violent anarchists linked to the Askatasuna social centre unleashed chaos on the city's streets. The demonstrations, which drew around 20,000 people, began peacefully but escalated into urban guerrilla warfare as a radical faction—comprising anarchists and autonomists—broke away from the main march. Masked protesters, some armed with Molotov cocktails, flares, fireworks, stones, and homemade explosives, targeted law enforcement in the Vanchiglia neighborhood, where Askatasuna was once located. The attacks left over 100 police officers injured, with one officer surrounded and beaten by a dozen assailants, and another struck in the head with a hammer. Police responded with tear gas and water cannons to repel the assaults, which continued into the night. The violence was widely condemned by political leaders, including Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni, who labeled the actions as unacceptable and a threat to democracy.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 1 31/05/2026 09:36:10

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space. As the demonstration neared the evicted building, riot police deployed tear gas, water cannons, and repeated baton charges against the crowd. Protesters, some of whom erected barricades, were met with physical force, resulting in numerous injuries and arrests. Eyewitnesses and legal observers reported that police initiated or escalated the violence, using excessive force to disperse the crowd and prevent them from reaching the Askatasuna site. The confrontation lasted several hours, with reports of officers using kicks, punches, and hammer blows against demonstrators, while protesters responded by throwing stones, fireworks, and Molotov cocktails. The heavy-handed police response was widely condemned, with critics accusing authorities of militarizing public spaces and suppressing dissent. [Peoples Dispatch] [Freedom News] [Abolitionist Futures]

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 2 31/05/2026 09:37:32

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space, which had been forcibly closed in December 2025. As the protest neared the evicted building, riot police deployed tear gas, water cannons, and baton charges against the crowd. Witnesses and legal observers reported that police repeatedly charged at demonstrators, who had erected improvised barricades in resistance. The confrontations lasted for hours, resulting in numerous injuries among protesters, some described as serious, and at least ten arrests. Police also faced attacks, with Molotov cocktails, stones, and fireworks thrown by some demonstrators, leading to over 100 officers injured. The heavy-handed response by authorities was widely condemned, with critics accusing police of initiating and escalating the violence, rather than de-escalating the situation.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 3 31/05/2026 09:37:54

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space, which had been forcibly closed in December 2025. As the protest neared the evicted building, riot police deployed tear gas, water cannons, and baton charges against the crowd. Witnesses and legal observers reported that police initiated or escalated the violence, with repeated baton charges and physical force used to disperse demonstrators who had erected barricades and resisted the advance of law enforcement. The confrontations lasted several hours, resulting in numerous injuries among protesters, some described as serious, and at least ten arrests. The heavy-handed police response, including the use of water cannons and tear gas, was widely condemned as disproportionate and an attempt to suppress dissent rather than maintain public order.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 4 31/05/2026 09:38:17

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space. As the demonstration progressed, a group of protesters moved toward the evicted building, where they were met by a heavy police deployment. Riot police responded to the throwing of stones and fireworks with water cannons, tear gas, and repeated baton charges. Eyewitnesses and legal observers reported that officers used physical force, including beatings, to disperse the crowd, with confrontations lasting several hours. At least ten people were arrested, and numerous injuries—some serious—were reported among demonstrators. The police action was widely condemned as excessive, with critics arguing it reflected a broader pattern of state repression against dissent in Italy.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 5 31/05/2026 09:38:33

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space, which had been forcibly closed in December 2025. As the demonstration progressed, a group of protesters moved toward the evicted building, where they were met by a heavy police deployment. Riot police responded to the throwing of firecrackers and stones with tear gas, water cannons, and repeated baton charges. Eyewitnesses and legal observers reported that officers used physical force, including kicks and punches, against demonstrators, some of whom erected barricades to resist the police advance. The confrontations lasted several hours, resulting in numerous injuries and at least ten arrests. The police's aggressive tactics—described by some as an escalation of state repression—sparked widespread condemnation, with critics accusing authorities of initiating and exacerbating the violence rather than de-escalating the situation.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 6 31/05/2026 09:38:52

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Around 50,000 people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space, which had been forcibly closed in December 2025. As protesters approached the evicted building, police deployed in large numbers responded with extreme force: water cannons, tear gas, and repeated baton charges were used against the crowd. Demonstrators, some of whom erected barricades and threw firecrackers and stones, were met with physical violence, including beatings by officers. Reports describe officers using kicks, punches, and even hammer blows against protesters, while Molotov cocktails were allegedly thrown by some demonstrators. The confrontations lasted several hours, resulting in numerous injuries on both sides, with at least 10 arrests and over 100 police officers reported injured. The heavy-handed police response was widely condemned, with critics accusing authorities of escalating violence and suppressing dissent under the guise of maintaining public order.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 7 31/05/2026 09:39:10

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space. As protesters approached the evicted building, riot police deployed in force, responding to Molotov cocktails and stones with water cannons, tear gas, and repeated baton charges. Eyewitnesses and legal observers reported that police initiated or escalated violence, beating demonstrators and making numerous arrests. The confrontations lasted for hours, with activists erecting barricades and resisting the police advance. The heavy-handed tactics left many injured and underscored the increasingly repressive approach to dissent under the current government.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 8 31/05/2026 09:39:37

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space. As the protest neared the evicted building, riot police deployed tear gas, water cannons, and repeated baton charges against the crowd. Demonstrators, some of whom erected barricades, resisted the police advance, leading to hours of confrontation. Reports indicate that police used excessive force, beating protesters and employing tactics that escalated the violence. The repression left numerous injuries among demonstrators and resulted in at least ten arrests. The heavy-handed response was widely condemned, with critics accusing authorities of militarizing the area and suppressing dissent under the guise of maintaining public order.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 9 31/05/2026 09:39:54

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space. As the demonstration progressed, riot police deployed tear gas, water cannons, and baton charges against the crowd. Protesters, some of whom erected barricades, resisted the police advance, leading to hours of confrontation. Reports indicate that police used physical force, including repeated baton charges, to disperse the demonstrators, resulting in numerous injuries and at least ten arrests. The repression was described as heavy-handed, with authorities justifying their actions as a response to Molotov cocktails, stones, and fireworks thrown by some protesters. The day's events underscored the escalating tensions between state forces and dissenting voices, with legal observers and activists condemning the police's use of force as excessive and disproportionate.

4-ASK-EN: Repetition 10 31/05/2026 09:40:13

On January 31, 2026, Turin witnessed violent clashes as riot police brutally repressed demonstrators protesting the eviction of the Askatasuna social centre. Tens of thousands of people, including activists from across Italy, marched in solidarity with the long-standing autonomous space. As the protest neared the evicted building, riot police deployed tear gas, water cannons, and baton charges against the crowd. Demonstrators, some of whom erected barricades, resisted the police advance, leading to hours of confrontation. Reports indicate that police used excessive force, beating protesters and making numerous arrests. The repression was widely condemned, with critics highlighting the militarized response to what began as a peaceful demonstration against the closure of a community hub and broader repressive policies.